Avignon

Divergence

By LISA NESSELSON

An affecting portrait of two wounded souls healing as best they can on the New Jersey Shore in early 2003, “Divergence” boasts nuanced, quietly devastating perfs by relative newcomers Traci Ann Wolfe and Jakob Hawkins. Profoundly American in its evocation of duty and personal responsibility, pic also allows that there’s such a thing as grief that sheer gumption can’t remedy. The specter of America’s presence in Iraq colors every frame. First pic by d.p. Patrick J. Donnelly shows talent all around.

Lanky U.S. Army airborne helicopter pilot Tim Lawson (Hawkins) shows up on his chilly, sparsely populated home turf. On temporary leave due to a bad leg wound, Tim isn’t terribly talkative with his more voluble pal, Dave (Ben Hindell).

Thanks to perky realtor Heidi Lipton (Marci Adilman, nailing an American archetype), Tim rents a beach cottage in which to recuperate and reflect. His neighbor is Clare O’Neil (Traci Ann Wolfe), who is grappling with at-first-unspecified grief, possibly related to the events of Sept. 11, but maybe not.

Lithe, blonde, good-boned Clare is cover-girl pretty and far from dumb, but unable to make sense of the overwhelming, senseless loss that has turned her life inside out. It emerges that she left a handsome home to drown her sorrow in alcohol -- so as not to drown herself, if the way she stares at the mighty tides at all hours is any indication.

Living with grief that refuses to be subsumed in distraction, central protags have been thrown off course. By proxy, the pic illuminates in small, relevant ways, how the nation itself has presumably veered off course in recent years.

Stand-out scenes include Tim’s visit to his father in a retirement home, Tim’s domestic helicopter outing with his former employer who served in Vietnam, and Clare’s tense meeting with her patrician mother who cares for her daughter, but may care about appearances more.

Unhurried yet suspenseful venture may strike some as needlessly downbeat, but pic’s choice to often let dismay trump solace is what gives it its strength.

Camera (color, HD), Donnelly; editor, Robert Mead; music, Ronen Landa; art director, Brandon Cheek; set decorator, Adrina Garibian; costume designer, Lynne Curtis; sound (Dolby), Justin Gray; assistant director, Yori Tondrowski. Reviewed at Avignon Film Festival (competing), June 22, 2007. Running time: 113 MIN.
Variety is striving to present the most thorough review database. To report inaccuracies in review credits, please click here. We do not currently list below-the-line credits, although we hope to include them in the future. Please note we may not respond to every suggestion. Your assistance is appreciated.

Web Exclusive

RELATED REVIEWS:

David & Layla - 7/19/2007 12:57:24 PM
Superheroes - 7/10/2007 8:31:06 PM
The Music in Me - 7/10/2007 7:29:54 PM
The Music In Me - 7/10/2007 6:41:58 PM

TALKBACK:

VIEW ALL DISCUSSIONS | COMMENT ON THIS REVIEW

Have an opinion about this article? Be the first to comment

Ads By Google

Film Study
Study Final Cut Pro Online w/ the Academy of Art. Free Info.
www.academyartonline.edu

Scout Screenplays Online
Free Service for Movie Producers and Development Execs
ScreenWritersVault.com

Image Consulting
corporate and one-on-one training a variety of 20 training topics www.professionalskillbuilders.com

Newsletters

Productions

Festival Listings

Real Estate

Featured Jobs

Commercial / Traffic Operations Administrator
NEW YORK
NY NBC Universal

Assistant to VP Marketing Services - Universal Pictures
UNIVERSAL CITY
CA NBC Universal

Picturps - Legal Administrator
UNIVERSAL CITY
CA NBC Universal

Secretary
UNIVERSAL CITY
CA NBC Universal

Want to help us make this site BETTER?
Please click here to take our survey.